Municipalities: where are the staff vacancies?

Is your municipality properly staffed to ensure you receive basic services?

Stats SA's latest Non-financial census of municipalities report provides a profile of the municipal workforce, shedding light on staff shortages in local government.

There were 314 117 funded posts across local government in 2016. Of these, 45 096 were unoccupied, translating to a national vacancy rate of 14,4%.

Notice on the map how Emfuleni municipality in Gauteng (the Vereeniging area) has the highest rate, with 59% of its 5 438 funded posts unfilled.

See more maps here showing the vacancy rates in water, electricity, road and finance departments.

How many recessions has SA experienced in the past?

A exploration of historical gross domestic product (GDP) data shows that South Africa has borne the brunt of seven economic recessions since 1961.

The generally agreed definition of recession is a fall in GDP (seasonally adjusted) for two consecutive quarters.

The graph shows how South Africa's economy has performed since 1961. The longest recession occurred in 1991–1992 when the economy declined for eight consecutive quarters, linked to a global recession.

The most recent recession occurred during 2008/9 at the time of the global financial crisis.

Municipal mayors and gender representivity

The graph shows the percentage of mayors in municipalities who are headed by females and males.

Nationally, 276 of South Africa's 278 municipalities had a sitting mayor in 2016, 107 (39%) of whom were women. This is according to Stats SA's latest Non-financial census of municipalities report.

Limpopo had the highest representation, with 21 of its 30 municipalities (or 70%) headed by a female mayor.

The province with the lowest female mayor representation was Western Cape (7 of 29 municipalities, or 24%).
